Part of this book lets criminal justice professionals know some things to look for when they are deciding whether an individual might need to be screened for ADHD. (In some countries screening for ADHD is routine within the criminal justice system. Sadly, it is not in the US.)

ADHD at this point significantly decreases the offender's return to the justice system.(6) In fact, a report to the British Parliament by the Health Service Home Office recommended screening of all arrestees for ADHD followed by supervised treatment. Unfortunately, this recommendation has not yet been acted on by Parliament.
