Often art teachers refer to 'mark-making' but what does this mean? It is a term that means just that – to make marks. You may think that mark-making is just for kindergarden children but no, it is a useful activity for all.

Fabricating his signature mixed-media collages with ephemera such as segments of billboards, flyers, and graffitied stencils, American artist Mark Bradford's works marry his interests in modernist abstraction with the urban community from which he culls his materials.

Using collage and paint on paper, Mark Bradford's Kryptonite possesses an organic quality in its grid-like composition. Its convoluted architecture and overlapping details radiate as a megalopolissprawl, a seething microcosm of activity.
